The fall number of "Western Humanities Review" features an article called "Walkara's Half Century," written by Gustive O. Larson, director of Cedar L D S Institute.

The 25 page article reviews the story of conquest in the Southwest from early Spanish invasion through the trapper, trader and reconnaissance periods and final settlement by the Mormon pioneers.

The Ute war chief Walker, having been involved in all phases of the development serves as a vehicle for the story. His movements which brought him frequently into Iron county, covered the area bounded roughly by Oregon and Spanish Trails and between new Mexico and California.
